Every day, young women across the country are making a difference in the world of public policy. They are working to improve the lives of their communities, their states, and their nation. Their stories are inspiring and remind us that we all have the power to make a difference.

Here are just a few of the many young women who are making a difference in public policy:

- Malala Yousafzai is a Pakistani activist for female education and a Nobel Peace Prize laureate. She was shot in the head by the Taliban in 2012 for speaking out in favor of education for girls. She survived the attack and has continued to speak out for the rights of girls and women around the world.

- Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez is the youngest woman ever elected to the United States Congress. She is a member of the Democratic Socialists of America and has advocated for progressive policies such as Medicare for All, a Green New Deal, and tuition-free college.
- Greta Thunberg is a Swedish environmental activist who has become a leading voice in the fight against climate change. She has spoken at the United Nations and other international forums, calling on world leaders to take action to address the climate crisis.
- Mikayla Smith is a Native American activist who has worked to protect the rights of indigenous people. She is the founder of the Arctic Youth Network, which works to empower young people to take action on climate change and other issues affecting the Arctic.
- Zipporah Luyima is a Ugandan activist who works to empower women and girls. She is the founder of the Zipporah Luyima Foundation, which provides education and other support services to girls in Uganda.

These are just a few of the many young women who are making a difference in public policy. Their stories are inspiring and remind us that we all have the power to make a difference in the world.

How You Can Get Involved

If you are interested in getting involved in public policy, there are many ways to do so. You can:

- Volunteer for a political campaign.
- Work for a nonprofit organization.
- Run for office yourself.
- Get involved in your community.

No matter how you choose to get involved, your voice and your actions can make a difference.

The young women who are making a difference in public policy are an inspiration to us all. They remind us that we all have the power to make a difference in the world. So get involved and make your voice heard!
