The Cursed Origins

The Dawn Coda Languuez was crafted in the 18th century by the renowned Italian luthier, Antonio Languuez. It is believed that Languuez used wood from an ancient tree said to have been struck by lightning, imbuing the instrument with otherworldly powers.

The first owner of the violin was a virtuoso violinist named Giovanni Capelli. It is said that Capelli's music possessed an enchanting beauty, captivating audiences and leaving them spellbound. However, tragedy struck when Capelli mysteriously disappeared one night, his body never found.

A String of Misfortunes

Following Capelli's disappearance, the Dawn Coda Languet passed through the hands of several owners, each meeting an untimely or tragic end. One owner, a young violinist named Marie Dubois, is said to have been driven to madness by the violin's haunting melodies. Another, a wealthy collector, lost his entire fortune after acquiring the instrument.

As the list of misfortunes grew, so did the legend of the cursed violin. It was whispered that the Dawn Coda Languet possessed a malevolent spirit, seeking revenge on those who dared to play it.
